

Nicolae Harsanyi. Military Periodicals in the André Savine Collection: A Bibliographic Description. A Master's Paper for the M.S. in L.S. degree. April, 2004. 38 pages.
Advisor: Charles McNamara

The goal of this paper is to create a bibliographic description of the military periodicals located in the André Savine Collection of the UNC-CH's Academic Affairs Library. The Savine Collection is a recent acquisition, purchased directly from Savine's family, and any kind of bibliographic data concerning the items it contains either have not been established or are to be found in other sources. Therefore this paper is a first attempt to establish a bibliographic description of a sizable section of the collection. The military periodicals treated herein were published in the twentieth century outside of the Soviet Union by various organizations of former Russian White Army cadres living in exile. The methodology employed to this purpose involved searching and obtaining data from a variety of relevant bibliographic sources (several American and Russian catalogs) and then confronting them with the original items in the Savine Collection.

Introduction

The André Savine Collection was assembled over the years by a Paris bibliophile and bookseller, whose name was appended to the collection upon the wishes of his widow.* The son of a White Army soldier, Paris-born André Savine owned the bookstore “Le Bibliophile russe” in the French capital. André Savine was a member of the prominent French Syndicat National de la Librairie Ancienne et Moderne and had earned the title of “Libraire expert.” As a highly regarded dealer and collector of antiquarian Russian books, Savine acquired hundreds of rare editions, archival materials and documents relating to the Russian diaspora and its culture. His personal collection, amounting to over 10,000 books, serials, manuscripts, photographs, examples of paper currency, was assembled over a period of thirty years before his death in 1999. The Savine Collection now in Chapel Hill includes this personal library, as well as the holdings of his former bookstore. The Academic Affairs Library of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill acquired the André Savine Collection in 2002, through the efforts of Nadia Zilper, Slavic Bibliographer, and the generous donation of Van and Kay Weatherspoon of Charlotte, N.C.

The Collection

Made up of more than 61,000 items, the André Savine Collection comprises several collections. Prominent is the one Savine called “Militaria.” It documents the life of the Russian White Army, beginning with its evacuation to Gallipoli in 1920 and continuing with the dispersal and settlement of its members in various countries in Europe, the Americas, the Far East, and Australia. This collection contains hand-written and illustrated journals of various regiments, memoirs, newsletters issued by different networks and associations of former soldiers preserving the organizational structure of the White Russian Army. These materials are precious sources for the study of the Russian diaspora in the twentieth century.

Another important section of the Savine Collection contains some 15,000 books published by exiled Russians, including poetry, fiction, history, memoirs, philosophy, religious studies, politics, children's literature, etc. Many of these are first editions autographed by prominent personalities such as Vladimir Nabokov, Feodor Shaliapin, Marina Tsvetaeva, Nina Berberova, Ivan Bunin, etc.

A final, but equally significant section of the Collection includes various archival materials: the archives of Russian émigré book publishers, booksellers and libraries around the world - 59 boxes, or approximately 22,500 pages - that include publishing house correspondence, book catalogs, invoices, library publications, vendors' catalogs, etc. Another large archive, that of the Union of Russian Taxi Drivers in Paris, includes about 120 member dossiers; some 100 pages of correspondence with French private and state organizations; 18 folders of minutes of meetings, financial statements, speeches delivered by members, lists of members who perished in World War II and members who were forcefully displaced to Germany as Zwangsarbeiter; and 4,494 cards with member information. The collection also includes the archives of The Paris Union of Russian Nurses and of the Russian Orthodox Church.

Historical Background

After the Bolsheviks seized power in 1917, Russia plunged into a bloody Civil War waged between the Red and White Armies. The White Army tried to restore the old order in the territories under its control, however, it was gradually beaten back by the Red Army. In the fall of 1920 the White Army was defeated by the Red Army in one of the bloodiest battles of the Russian Civil War at Perekop – the isthmus separating the Crimean peninsula from the mainland. Between November 13 and 16, 1920, some 100,000 demoralized White Army troops and 50,000 civilians boarded the ships of the former Imperial Black Sea Fleet and fled the Crimea for Constantinople and exile. General Piotr Nikolaevich Vrangel, Chief Commander of the White Army in Crimea, took charge of the disorganized and starving army in Constantinople. He negotiated with the Ottoman Empire and the French who occupied Constantinople at the end of the First World War for permission to settle the fully armed White Army in several camps in Turkey, Yugoslavia, and Aegean island of Lemnos. The principal camp was at Gallipoli in Turkey. There General Vrangel prepared his army for a military campaign against the Bolshevik government. He secured provisions for the army, instilled strict discipline, and established military schools. He tried to normalize the life of troops and civilians in Gallipoli as much as circumstances permitted. The camp had a church and a hospital housed in tents, a theater and a prison. Almost immediately many refugees came to associate the army with the very existence of the Russian state and Russia itself.

By the year 1923 it became clear that the Bolsheviks had consolidated their control in Russia and hopes of a military campaign against them vanished. The White Army troops had to be reintegrated into civilian life. That was a colossal task. In 1924

Vrangel formed the Russian General Military Union (Russkii Obshche-Voinskii Soiuz). This organization preserved the army structure of the demilitarized White Army and played an important role in the very survival of the military refugees. At the same time many regimental associations and societies of First World War and Civil War veterans started to form. Most of these associations published their own journals, very few of which have survived. The publications of these associations, as they are represented in the Savine Collection, constitute the subject of the bibliographic description included in this paper.

Methodology and Organization of the Bibliography

Thematically, the military periodicals stored in the André Savine collection can be grouped into such wide categories as: journals of military science and history, veterans' publications, and various newsletters published by numerous organizations of former military officers and cadets. Also included here are publications dealing with Cossack life, namely those periodicals that have carried over into exile the military organizational structure of the old imperial Russia.

Depending on the availability of relevant information, the bibliographic description that follows tried to establish:

1. the title and subtitle of the publications, as well as their variations.
2. the publishing authority (in case of an organization or association) or the publisher (if it was an individual).
3. the editor or editors/editorial board (noting their succession, or variations in membership).

4. the place and year of publication. Variations of locations where the periodicals were issued, as well as the years of the issues represented in the Savine Collection (marked by []) are also noted.
5. the full run of the published title.
6. the method of printing, other than press.
7. the frequency of publication, when known.
8. the specific holdings in the André Savine Collection.

In compiling this bibliographic description, information was gleaned not only from the originals existing in the Collection, but also from the sources mentioned in the bibliographic list attached to this introduction. If discrepancies occurred between the data found in the various sources used, they are mentioned in the Note(s) accompanying each record.

Titles, subtitles, and proper names of persons and organizations are transliterated from the Cyrillic (both old and new scripts) into Latin according to Library of Congress rules. The compiler's information is in English. Places of publication are given in English.

NOTE

* Information about André Savine and his collection was obtained from repeated conversations with Nadia Zilper, Slavic Bibliographer at UNC-Chapel Hill's Academic Affairs Library and Curator of the André Savine Collection.
