Course Description

The behavioral and cognitive activities of those who interact with information, with emphasis on the role of information mediators. How information needs are recognized and resolved; the ecological context of information use and dissemination. Contemporary social problems around information, people, groups and institutions.

Aims

This course will explore contemporary social problems that shape how people can access and use information in a complex world with competing goals, unequal access, and limited resources. We will focus on how politics, power, and economics influence information mediators and cultural institutions with a public mission.

Readings draw heavily from the academic essay genre. We will explore how the academic essay synthesizes and communicates scholarly and expert information for different audiences. The final assignment -- the major assignment of this course -- is producing an academic essay that explores the political, economic and cultural impact of two types of “libraries”.

Teaching Philosophy
This is a graduate level seminar. I expect that you want to be here. That means demonstrating strong intrinsic motivation to complete readings and engage with class discussion. I believe that discussion and collaboration are the foundational principles of an advanced liberal arts degree. In graduate school, “grades” are the bare minimum of assessment (and not even a good assessment tool at that). If grades are your primary motivation, this class will feel different. As a discussion-based and reading intensive course, you will have significant commitments before each class meeting. I recommend reading guides and thought experiments to prepare for class throughout the course reading schedule. I aim to include different kinds of engagement. You can speak up in class. You can also participate in the class’s backchannel (IMing in Zoom chat). Additionally, you can send me reflections via email, social media content, video of your interpretative dance and other forms of engagement that I have not yet imagined.

Important Dates & Information

No Class: Sept 6, Oct. 11, Oct. 25, or Nov. 22

Last class session: Nov. 29

ASSIGNMENTS

In-class prep assignments are due to me after class. You submit them online in Sakai. The document must have a name WITHIN THE DOCUMENT TEXT to receive credit. I grade for completeness. You receive a yes/no for submitting the assignment.

Response papers are due the Friday before the corresponding class session meets. Name, submission guidelines are the same. I grade these for engagement with the material and clarity. I use the university grading scale.

See my teaching philosophy on grades and participation. I expect participation. I expect you to get an A. I deduct progress towards an A based on the quality of your engagement with the course.

The final assignment is a comparative case study of Little Free Libraries and the Imagination Library. The case study should address the political, economic, and cultural dimensions of each. You should consider if either or both constitutes a “social problem”, as we have defined it in class. You should bring in 3-5 outside sources. You may also include assigned readings as sources but these are not outside sources. You are to approach this as an academic essay. That means advancing an argument using clear language and data/evidence.
