Article about the author of "Vote Different"

Who is "ParkRidge47"?

By Micah L. Silry, 03/07/2007 - 3:06pm

The first piece of voter-generated video to make a splash in Campaign 2008 has hit, and with it comes a mystery. Is "Vote Different" really the work of an amateur, a civilian if you will? Or is it a shrewd move by someone who wants to stir up trouble between the Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama campaigns? After all, comparing Hillary to Big Brother, droning on about her "conversation" with America and portraying her supporters as silent automatons is hardly what Obama supporters want to say about the former First Lady. Or is it?

Yesterday, I was talking with several of TechPresident's contributing bloggers, and we all agreed that "Vote Different" was a terrific piece of viral video. Indeed, the minute-long mash-up of Apple's famous "1984" ad and some Hillary speeches has been viewed more than 100,000 times since being posted two days ago by someone using the handle "ParkRidge47."

One tip-off that this is not the work of a rank amateur is how well the video integrates not just Hillary's speeches into the rectangular TV boxes shown in the spot, but the placement of Obama's circular campaign logo on the woman runner's shirt (see below). Of course, it's totally possible that someone unconnected with any political operation could have these skills.
